All across this great state of ours, people are doing good—to better the lives of others. The power of generosity fuels our communities to make needed changes in Oregon’s healthcare and education, children and families, and arts and culture.

Meanwhile, our communities themselves are facing changes. Within the next decade, 500,000 more people will make their homes in Oregon. Communities of color here are growing faster than the national average, accelerating the diversity of our state’s population.

The Oregon Community Foundation is ready.
We’re connecting—with each other.
We’re committed—to our shared values.
We’re collaborating—to make effective change.

TOGETHER
WE’RE MAKING OUR MARK.
Dear Friends of OCF,

It's such a pleasure for us to look back at the past year and thank our donors, commend our partners, recognize our volunteers and analyze our impact. We feel humbled—and inspired—by the caring, commitment and compassion of Oregonians.

Oregon is facing many changes. To serve the growing diversity of our communities, we realize we must never stop working toward truly equitable opportunities—for everyone. Together, we can address Oregon’s challenges and apply its strengths, to more successfully achieve our goals.

Here in the 2015 Annual Report, you’ll meet many of the people who are helping us carry out our good work: The professional advisors who connect us to generous Oregonians. The nonprofit leaders who meet the needs of the most vulnerable. The many donors and volunteers who contribute to education, health, family life, the arts and other areas of our communities. We’re doing what it takes to improve lives for all Oregonians through the power of philanthropy.

We simply couldn’t accomplish all this without you. So thank you! Not a day goes by that we don’t feel grateful for everyone who is a part of our success. We look forward to an even more rewarding 2016.

THE LIBRARY ASSESSMENT REPORT HIGHLIGHTED THE CRITICAL ROLE THAT LIBRARIES PLAY.
Through inclusive partnerships and a focus on common values, the Foundation works with communities to create and support programs that will have a lasting impact on issues that affect Oregonians around the state.

We know that HEALTH is critical to opportunity, that EDUCATION means economic security, that engaged citizens and ECONOMIC VITALITY create LIVABLE communities, and that to reach our full potential as a society, we need the passion and promise of ARTS AND CULTURE.

By strengthening each of these areas we will strengthen life for all Oregonians. Here are a few of examples of what, together, we can do.
The health and wellbeing of Oregonians couldn’t be more important to OCF and its donors. In 2015 alone, the Foundation invested over $28 million in programs to improve the health of children and families, with children’s dental health as a top, statewide priority.

Good mental health also matters to OCF. That’s why it contributed to the Legacy Health Foundation, which is collaborating with other hospital systems in the area to build the Unity Center for Behavioral Health, opening late 2016. The 101-inpatient-bed, fully staffed facility “will provide a warm and safe haven for all those experiencing a behavioral health crisis,” says Maureen Bradley, Senior Vice President and CDO of The Office of Philanthropy at Legacy Health.

Located in the former Holladay Park Hospital building near Portland’s Convention Center, it’s the first of its kind in the region – and sorely needed. Oregon ranks ninth in the country for suicide, the second cause of death for 15 to 25-year-olds. Our state and Washington are among the worst for access to care for serious mental illnesses. In a crisis, many people go to hospital emergency departments, which are not set up to handle their issues.

The Unity Center for Behavioral Health gives them an alternative – with prompt psychiatric and medical help to de-escalate, and the right community referrals to guide them in rebuilding their lives.

“In addition to providing the right care, The Center will also help remove the stigma of mental illness,” says Bradley. “Through local philanthropic leadership and compassion, we open the door for similar efforts, nationally. There is no doubt that Unity will eventually serve as a national role model.”
Education for a child begins the moment he or she is born. And that’s where OCF starts with its education initiatives. Its programs address birth to early childhood through K-12 and on to higher education and training.

Children’s first, and most important, teachers are their parents. The Oregon Parenting Education Collaborative (OPEC) embraces this crucial role. OPEC is a partnership of four of Oregon’s largest foundations—The Ford Family Foundation, the Meyer Memorial Trust and The Collins Foundation—and Oregon State University. Together, they’re working with communities around the state to strengthen their parenting-education offerings and make them more accessible to mothers and fathers.

In 2015 alone, OPEC has given ten organizations multi-year “small grants” to expand access to their parenting-education programs. The Collaborative is currently reaching 26 counties with 14 regional “Hubs” – community organizations that serve as focal points for schools, child care facilities, health care providers and other service providers that families turn to for support. The Hubs coordinate with these providers to ensure that parents have great access to their parenting-education activities. Since 2010, thousands of parents have benefitted. Working towards a statewide system, in the next few years, OPEC expects to have a Hub in every county in Oregon.

The goal? That the highest-quality classes and workshops, home visits, and family activities and events are available to all parents in Oregon.
A SOUND IMPROVEMENT

LAKEVIEW LIBRARY

Through partnership and leadership, OCF’s Livability programs inspire the vital connections that open up social, economic and cultural opportunities, leading to welcome changes in our communities. What a smart investment in Oregon’s future!

So what does acoustical paneling have to do with this? It’s badly needed on the walls and ceiling of the Lake County Library District’s recently built Lakeview branch. The sound bounces so loudly around the building that it’s distracting and disruptive. Thanks to an OCF grant, the acoustical paneling will finally be installed.

OCF values the Lakeview Library for offering more than a great collection of books to check out. It’s also a key gathering place. Over 40 percent of the county’s 8,000-some residents have current library cards, and the public programs at the Lakeview branch are well attended. With its books, lectures, readings and free computer use, the library promotes education and literacy for everyone, preschoolers on up.

A quieter space for all makes one thing loud and clear: OCF’s generosity and a county’s love of its libraries assure that the Lakeview branch provides continued enjoyment for generations to come.

Arts & Culture

Art stirs the imagination and sparks new ideas. Fred W. Fields, an engineer, believed strongly in this. To honor him and his generous bequest in 2012, OCF made a five-year, $32-million investment to support education and arts programs in Oregon, through the Foundation’s Arts and Culture initiative.

Studies show a link between arts education and greater academic success, self-confidence, motivation and critical thinking. And yet, school budget cuts (for 20-plus years now) have severely reduced or eradicated arts education at many Oregon schools. Students from low-income households who can’t afford private lessons and community classes are hit the hardest.

OCF's Studio to School initiative brings the discipline and exploration of the art studio into the school. Eighteen nonprofit arts organizations—including Portland Children’s Museum, Ashland Arts Center and Sisters Folk Festival—received OCF grants to collaborate with their areas’ school districts. Focusing on low-income and rural communities, and those of color, they plan and provide sustainable arts-education opportunities for K-8 youth. Their projects, held during and outside of school hours, involve the broader community, while having the potential to be replicated and offered year-round. Talk about creative!

“The power to shape Oregon’s future remains where it has always been – in our collective hands.”

– Former Governor Ted Kulongoski

The view outside our windows may look different and the communities we call home may be equally as diverse, but as a state, our connections far outweigh our differences.

On the following pages, we shine a light on these connections by highlighting the generosity, volunteerism and caring spirit that bring us together. These values are firmly embedded in OCF’s mission to improve life for all Oregonians. What follows are just a few of the people and places that help make that happen.

TOGETHER, WE ARE DOING MORE.
A LESSON IN GENEROSITY

JANIE TEATER

Janie Teater knows she’s blessed. “I grew up in a family where education was a priority and my parents made sure we went to college. And they taught us to take responsibility, with our time, finances or talents, to make our community, our state, a better place for everyone.”

Born and raised in Corvallis, Janie carried this lesson into her life, as a teacher in schools for 32 years. In Bend, where she lives, she and Amy Tykeson, President and CEO of BendBroadband, lead “Now for Bend,” a coalition of community members, businesses and organizations in support of the Oregon State University Cascades campus. Teater also has volunteered with SMART (Start Making A Reader Today), since its start 25 years ago.

Janie brought her commitment and passion for quality education in Oregon to the Central Oregon Leadership Council, when OCF invited her to join four years ago. She researches and evaluates organizations requesting grants, and offers up to the Council what she’s learned about them through the years.

“When I was a teacher in the classroom, people entrusted me with their most valuable assets, their children. OCF is another way for me to be entrusted—with its goals and dreams. I believe in OCF, and I consider it a privilege to support its mission.”
Bend lawyer and estate planner Lori Murphy first learned about community foundations when she was practicing in the DC metro area. There she was asked to join the board of a community foundation started with the restitution paid to a husband after the death of his wife in the 9/11 Pentagon attack. “This man took a small gift and leveraged it into something much greater. That’s incredible to me,” Lori said.

When Lori moved back to Oregon in 2014, she immediately started searching for another community foundation. “OCF quickly became the obvious choice,” Lori says. “I was raised with a love for families and history. As an estate planner, people trust me to share their families’ histories, and they trust me to help them translate that into how they want to be remembered.

Her clients appreciate “not only that OCF is statewide, but also that it has a local office in Bend.” That local presence is essential to her estate planning work, Lori says. “As a professional advisor, when I have clients who want to give charitably, I always introduce OCF as an option. It makes a difference that they can meet with OCF’s Julie Gregory a mile away from my office, and look out at Mount Bachelor as they contemplate their legacy.”
PAT SERRURIER

Native Oregonian and long-time Bend resident Pat Serrurier compares her childhood to the vintage Dick and Jane book stories about gentle and positive early years full of learning. She grew up in a white colonial house in the heart of Portland and was embraced by a loving family. Her parents worked hard, volunteered in the community and donated to nonprofit organizations. Philanthropy was simply a way of life.

Today, Pat is passing on her family’s giving tradition with a charitable fund at OCF. Each year, they all sit down for a lively discussion about where to donate. “I love talking with them about their interests and the causes they stand behind.”

“I’ve had such a fortunate life, and I wanted my kids and grandkids to be part of the decision-making process of giving back,”

While living in Portland with her husband Larry and their three children, she eventually took a teaching position at Lincoln High School where she worked for 15 years.

“I worked with these amazing students that came from such various backgrounds,” says Pat. “They were wonderful and we built trusted relationships that I’ll never forget. Now I reach out to my grandkids as a great way to keep learning together about the changing world, and to share our family values of giving back.”

A GIVING TRADITION
Just because you’re aging doesn’t mean you’ve stopped growing. The Mid-Columbia Senior Center, in The Dalles, makes sure of it. With its art classes and health support groups, day trips and evening live music, bowling and Bingo, this vibrant center has played a vital role in the community for over two decades.

It, too, is growing. “The number of activities downstairs has tripled over the last eight years,” says Scott McKay, Director.

The Mid-Columbia Senior Center wants to keep making its services available, to everyone. Right now, though, it can’t. Nearly 30 years ago, the City of The Dalles donated property to the Center and a Community Development Block Grant supported construction of the two-story building. There’s just one thing: The only way up and down its two floors is via an outside staircase. There’s no elevator.

So the Center started its own campaign, UpLifting Elevator Fund-Raiser, asking for donations to install an indoor elevator. It collected enough dollars to apply for matching grants, and in 2015 it received one from OCF.

Now anyone can benefit from all the myriad of activities, programs and services at the Mid-Columbia Senior Center. And together, they’ll both continue to grow.

“The elevator addition will greatly enhance our ability to support older adults in the Mid-Columbia area.”
Scott McKay, Director, Mid-Columbia Senior Center
Dennis Barnett

CPA Dennis Barnett moved to Hermiston in 1978, which means he’s pretty much considered a local by now. “The community is a very open one,” he says, “so if you come here and have an interest in supporting the community, you’ll be welcome.”

Dennis still finds time to stay involved despite the demands of his large family—“we have nine children, and sixteen grandchildren.” A board member of the local rodeo, he and his wife helped raise $2 million for the new Eastern Oregon Trade and Event Center and $1.2 million for a new stadium. They often cook meals for visiting sports teams, and they also help out at their church.

From his vantage as a fundraiser and volunteer, Dennis has seen first-hand the benefits of OCF. “Whether it’s helping the underprivileged or rebuilding the Ashford grange, OCF is a great resource for eastern Oregon,” he explains.

“Local organizations have limited funding opportunities, but OCF opens doors to resources from across the state.”

As a CPA, Dennis has also seen OCF’s benefits to his clients. “My clients like OCF because it’s a well-run, well-managed institution that helps them give back effectively and efficiently both during their life and after it,” Dennis explains. He encourages his clients to give generously, he says. “Whether it’s to OCF, a local nonprofit, or anything else around the state, it’s all about focusing on the community.”
TREASURE VALLEY
CHILDREN’S RELIEF NURSERY

Raising a child can be challenging and stressful. Good thing the Treasure Valley Relief Nursery is here to help.

Like other relief nurseries around the country, TVCRN helps to reduce child abuse and neglect. Knowing that many parents can feel overwhelmed, the Ontario-based organization is helping them manage their stress, and appreciate the importance, and joys, of parenting. In TVCRN’s therapeutic classroom, children 18 months through five years can gradually heal, socially and emotionally. The interventionists who help them develop that stronger sense of self also visit their homes, setting new goals with their families.

OCF was there for TVCRN from the start, in 2009, and the Foundation has come through for it, again. With 25-32 children always on the waiting list, “the need for a building of our own that could provide a more therapeutic environment for children, allow us to serve more families and improve our current programs was greater than the daunting task of raising money in Oregon’s highest-poverty county,” says Katherine Collins, TVCRN’s Executive Director. Grants from OCF’s Judith K. Hofer Philanthropic Fund and E. Henry Wemme Fund are upgrading the security, technology and telephone systems in the new building.

“We are determined to help our youngest citizens move toward trajectories of success,” says Collins. “We know improving life in Oregon is important to OCF, as well.”
Tucked in Oregon’s northeast corner, in Joseph, the Josephy Center for Arts and Culture draws people from all over the world. Since 2013, they have been gathering here for classes and exhibits, readings and concerts, presentations and films.

From the start, OCF has seen the Josephy Center as a vital force in the region. Co-founder Anne Stephens says, “OCF has been very generous with financial help, and with advice about partnering with other local nonprofits,” such as Fishtrap, for writers, and the Wallowa Valley Music Alliance.

“Our local nonprofits don’t lack for ideas, energy or enthusiasm. However, because we don’t have big corporations or wealthy philanthropists here, we lack money,” says Anne.

As a volunteer on the Eastern Oregon Leadership Council, she consults with organizations in the region, urging them to apply for grants. She also looks for opportunities for her own community. “It’s very rewarding to see all the exciting work going on here. I have a real interest in encouraging collaboration among rural nonprofits.”

Like the Josephy Center, OCF is a true gathering place—“for worthwhile projects that will impact people for years to come,” says Anne. “OCF makes such a difference in so many lives.”
THE OPPORTUNITY TO LEARN

JANEEN McANINCH

Becker Capital Management’s CEO, Janeen McAninch, is no stranger to giving back. She volunteers with Medical Teams International and Meals on Wheels. She has served on many nonprofit boards and is also a volunteer grant evaluator for OCF—“One has to be very responsible in the allocation of funds to make sure that one is funding programs that are best-in-class,” Janeen says.

Janeen finds her volunteer service rewarding. “Volunteering gives me the opportunity to learn and see what affects people in our city and our state,” she says. “I was raised with the understanding that for those to whom much has been given, much is expected in return. It is my and my family’s responsibility to give back to those who are not as fortunate.” A number of her clients share that responsibility and privilege, Janeen says.

That’s where OCF enters the equation, says Janeen. “We have clients that truly want to have their funds benefit other citizens of the state of Oregon, and OCF’s prudent stewardship creates even more funds with which to improve the lives of fellow Oregonians.” OCF also makes philanthropy easier, Janeen adds. “It is a very streamlined and convenient way to give back, whether through outright gifts to OCF or via a donor-advised fund. OCF provides clients with the platform to be as engaged as they want to be without the administrative headaches that might go with a separate family foundation,” Janeen explains. “It’s really a marvelous organization.”

Octaviano Merécias gets around. Some people know him as a Mixteco-Spanish-English writer of short stories and poetry. He also leads the National Replication of Portland’s 4-H Tech Wizards’ out-of-school STEM (science, technology, engineering and math) mentoring program for underrepresented students. And he’s Associate Director of Outreach for the Center for Latino/Latina Studies and Engagement, and Extension faculty, at Oregon State University Portland Metro.

When OCF staff asked Octaviano to be on the Portland Metro Leadership Council, they relied on his experience and turned to him for advice. Since fall 2015, he has been attending organizations’ and institutions’ meetings and events. He relays their needs to OCF, so it can build key partnerships with them.

“OCF is doing amazing work in education and leadership development. The Latino Partnership Program and the K-12 initiatives are examples that should be supported,” says Octaviano, who volunteered on the latter’s evaluation committee for two years before joining the Leadership Council.

“We all have stories to share. Through OCF’s involvement, we learn each other’s stories,” he goes on to say. “But we also find opportunities to collaborate. I’m a firm believer in OCF’s efforts to transform communities and create a safer state for them to do good for Oregon.”
You can hear the frustration in Sara Raman’s voice: “Many schools look at special-needs children as liabilities.” Her husband, Raman quickly adds, “But they can be valuable members of society. A lot of them are quite amazing.” Their 23-year-old son, Bharath, who is mildly autistic, is one of them. He charges through jigsaw puzzles and plays a mean mridangan, a Southern Indian drum.

Bharath is fortunate that his parents can afford his music classes. Not so for many young people. “But poverty and special needs is the worst combination,” says Sara. Since they often require one-on-one care, like her son does, “there are no after-school programs for them here.” Enter the newly established Raman Family Fund, for underprivileged children with special needs.

Raman, a retired Intel engineer, grew up among musicians in India where he married Sara, who is also known as Jayanthi Raman, a well-known, professional Indian classical dancer and teacher. The two, who live in Beaverton, founded Rasika, a nonprofit Indian arts and culture organization, and OCF grant recipient.

The Ramans can rely on OCF. “They’re fiscally managed well, the staff is kind and compassionate, and their hearts and brains are connected to their knowledge of communities’ needs,” says Sara.

“I’m hoping others will follow with their own funds,” says Raman. “It’s not how much you give that counts, but what you achieve when you give.”
“We have been welcomed and guided by OCF staff to identify the community’s greatest needs.”

For Amador and Rosalie Bustos, owners of the national radio broadcasting corporation, Bustos Media, poverty and discrimination were very real obstacles. Amador and his family immigrated to California from Aguililla, Mexico when he was twelve, and both he and Rosalie grew up in poverty. But with strong encouragement from his parents, Amador furthered his education, receiving first a BA, and then a Master’s degree, from University of California at Berkeley.

After Amador and Rosalie grew their business to a point where their resources exceeded their family’s needs, the Bustos’ wanted to start giving back. “Since education was our way out of poverty, Rosalie and I had talked about establishing a scholarship program to help high-achieving but economically poor Latino high school seniors gain acceptance to a four-year university,” Amador says. The resulting program funded 77 students.

Over the years, Amador and Rosalie have also become major contributors to Causa, Adelante Mujeres, the OCF Latino Leadership Fund Challenge (which Amador initiated), and other causes. OCF has proven valuable to their work, the Bustos’ say. Through their OCF fund, Amador and Rosalie have been able to streamline their philanthropy to those causes that matter most to them. Paramount, says Amador, are programs that work to eliminate “the disparities that still exist due to racism. If color still divides us, who is going to help the underserved? As a person of color,” he adds, “I have a profound sense of appreciation for the opportunities I’ve received and an unshakable motivation to pay it forward.”
A STRONG COMMUNITY LINK

FERNANDO RODRÍGUEZ CASILLAS

When Fernando Rodríguez Casillas came to Long Beach, Washington from Mexico 15 years ago, “I’d gone to college, so I had skills,” he says. “But I didn’t need to know much English to be a baker.” Getting a job was his top priority—“and then I learned English.”

Soon, a bakery customer and he were teaching each other their own languages, and Fernando also started volunteering at the Lower Columbia Hispanic Council. He continued volunteering there after he was hired as a consultant in 2003 by Craft3, an OCF-supported nonprofit Community Development Financial Institution that serves low-to-moderate-income communities in Oregon and Washington. In 2012, the Foundation invited Rodríguez to join the North Coast Leadership Council.

“There are few Hispanics involved in the philanthropy or nonprofit worlds. The Leadership Council knows that to better serve the community as a whole, they need a Hispanic to link to that population,” says Fernando, who is now a Financial Systems Analyst at Craft3. “I’ve been blessed that I’ve had access to knowledge in many different ways. To me, there’s great satisfaction in taking my knowledge now to help other people.”

A SOLID START
CLATSOP & LINCOLN COUNTIES

In 2012-2013, only 66 percent of third-graders in Oregon met reading standards. It’s a disturbing statistic. The result can mean academic difficulties for these students throughout their school years.

OCF and its funding partners aim to change that, with the P-3 (prenatal to third grade) Alignment initiative. With grants from the initiative, school districts partner with community organizations to build links with parents of young children and early-childhood providers. Together they’re building kids’ academic skills through outreach, training, community classes and reading programs.

“The real strength is in the collaboration and the partnerships we’re forming. It’s great how well it’s working,” says Lauren Sigman, Early Learning Coordinator with the Lincoln County School District, in Newport.

Lincoln County’s P-3 team includes Early Childhood Special Education, Head Start, kindergarten teachers and the Confederated Tribe of Siletz Indians Tribal Head Start. The team clarified what kindergarten readiness means for parents and caregivers through a series of “I Can” statements, such as “I can take turns,” or “I can recognize my name.”

The P-3 Alignment grant in Clatsop County supports a coordinator, Dan Gaffney, who works with all of the school districts in the county as well as with early learning programs and community organizations such as the local libraries, Departments of Parks and Recreation and the Coast Guard to align and strengthen early learning efforts.

OCF has been helped in these efforts by the Lora L. and Marin N. Kelley Family Foundation Trust and the Ford Family Foundation.

As Dan says, “We’re capitalizing on the diversity of the people in our counties. They’re more than willing to try to make our communities better for children and their families.”
A LOVING LEGACY

LINDA KOZLOWSKI

Up here, near Manzanita, where rocky cliffs scallop the Coast and seagulls’ cries ride the salt air, Linda Kozlowski gazes out over the ocean. “This is often where I go when I’m feeling my saddest,” she says. It’s also where she feels close to her son.

Jeffrey died unexpectedly from a brain aneurism at age 42, on January 29, 2013. He left behind a fulfilling career as a biotech software engineer in Seattle, two cats he rescued from the woods and many people who loved him. “Jeffrey was very gentle and grounded, and would do anything to help his friends. He found peace in nature, and loved the outdoors, animals, hiking and camping,” says Linda, a volunteer with the OCF North Coast Leadership Council, who spreads the word about OCF’s grant opportunities to Tillamook County’s nonprofits.

After Jeffrey died, she and her husband, Bill Supak, set up The Jeffrey C. Kozlowski Memorial Fund. “We knew that OCF would honor him in a way that was consistent with his values, and focus on the things that meant a great deal to him,” she says.

CARTM Recycling Center in Manzanita, DoveLewis Emergency Animal Hospital and Lower Nehalem Community Land Trust put Jeffrey’s legacy to good use. Linda says, “To know that his memory is kept alive through the good work he cherished means so much to us.”

“OCF is sensitive and responsive to our needs, and they’re very knowledgeable, helping us identify where they can best target funds.”
A DUTY TO HELP

BARBARA SMITH

Salem is a wonderful town, says estate planner Barbara Smith. “It’s easy to get around in, it’s very family-oriented, and it’s perfectly poised to go to the beach or to the mountains or to Portland.” Her son is thirteen, she says, and Salem’s pace of living affords her enough work-life balance for her to help out with his Boy Scout troop.

Salem’s historical lineage is another draw, Barbara says, and she is honored that her firm, Hetzel Williams, has helped to shape it. “Our firm has been around for 109 years, and I’ve really enjoyed working with generations of families.”

As an estate planning lawyer, Barbara’s work brings her into close contact with many members of the community who have helped strengthen Salem’s greatest institutions. “My clients are very generous: they hold to the idea that you leave your community better than you found it.”

OCF helps her clients be strategic with their philanthropy, Barbara says. “They have a wide variety of charitable ideas, but they don’t always have a well-formulated charitable plan, so OCF is a great tool for them to realize their charitable ideas efficiently and in ways that are of maximum benefit to their chosen charities. My clients are always positive about their experiences with OCF,” Barbara adds. “They really enjoy the giving experience.”
UNITING LIVES
UNIDOS BRIDGING COMMUNITY
The number of Latinos in Yamhill County has recently grown, and it’s only increasing as new, immigrant families continue to be welcomed into the broader community. This diverse population promises to become even more vigorous and vibrant—with the help of Unidos Bridging Community and OCF.

Established in 2012, Unidos wants everyone living in Yamhill County to experience and appreciate the area’s cultural diversity. Anyone can go to its workshops to learn about the issues that many immigrants face in the United States, and their valuable contributions in the county, too. Qualified individuals with a goal to become naturalized U.S. citizens attend its volunteer-taught citizenship classes (in partnership with Lutheran Community Services Northwest). Meanwhile, through its legislative and other political-advocacy efforts, Unidos works hard for comprehensive immigration reform. And it collaborates with 32 organizations to provide services to Latinos.

Now, OCF makes possible a monthly education forum addressing topics relevant to the Latino community, as well as a series of Latina Leadership Development workshops.

“Unidos is thrilled to receive a grant from OCF,” said its Executive Director, Sally Godard. “When all members of a community can participate in its activities, resources and decision-making, the community becomes stronger, more stable and better able to withstand the winds of change.”

From providing educational and economic opportunities, and safe and affordable housing, to supporting civic engagement, and more, Unidos is helping to build a sturdier and more durable Yamhill County for all.
In 2000, Arnie Hollander and Susan Watkins moved onto their 55-acre forest and Christmas tree farm near McMinnville and haven’t looked back. While still working full-time jobs, they have spent the last fifteen years improving the ecological health of their property by creating, stewarding, and selectively harvesting a more biodiverse forest—“it’s muddy work,” says Arnie—while also throwing themselves full-tilt into the local community.

They give generously of their time: both Arnie and Susan have volunteered extensively with the Yamhill Valley Cultural Coalition as well as many other organizations. In addition, Arnie serves on OCF’s Northern Willamette Valley Leadership Council.

They also enjoy giving back monetarily, and have started a fund at OCF to help direct their contributions. “It was a really easy process,” Arnie says. Susan and Arnie’s fund grants to organizations ranging from the Yamhill County Food Bank to Planned Parenthood to the Virginia Garcia Medical Clinics; it also provides scholarships to Yamhill County Hispanic students.

They chose OCF for a number of reasons, Susan explains. “I like the fact that it’s dedicated to the whole state of Oregon, and to the types of causes we’ve always supported. It’s also very well-run.” Its accessibility is another benefit, she adds. “With OCF, you don’t have to be from a wealthy family to set up a fund—you don’t have to be in the one-percent to be a philanthropist!”
COMMUNITY CHAMPIONS

JOHN AND TERI WHITTLE

John and Teri Whitty of Coos Bay are happy with their lot in life. They have six children “who are all just great people”; a squirrel-obsessed German shepherd named Paddy; and a shared knack for championing a good cause. John was on the Coos Bay hospital board back when the new hospital was built and, says Teri proudly, “it’s a really wonderful hospital—I don’t think it would be there without him.” Teri, meanwhile, throws genuinely fun fundraisers.

John and Teri have been married for 55 years, and next September, John will hit sixty years as a practicing lawyer. He used to do everything, including bailing folks out of the drunk tank, John says, but now “I do mostly estate planning and estate administration, as well as business and real estate work.”

As both a professional advisor and OCF leadership council member, John has seen firsthand OCF’s benefits to his clients and the community. “I often have clients that want to make charitable gifts, but don’t know how to go about it. OCF administers and grows their funds, and they’ve done really well for my clients,” he says.

“In turn, those funds enable good things to happen for all kinds of charitable organizations here,” John adds. “The Marshfield High School Scholarship Fund and the Ready-to-Smile program, which improves children’s dental health, have been two really effective OCF-supported initiatives.”

KINDERGARTEN WITH CONFIDENCE
PORT ORFORD/ LANGLOIS SCHOOL DISTRICT
Sandstone cliffs, windswept pines and rocky outcrops line the Southern Oregon coast, yet amidst this wealth of beauty live some of the poorest people.

The Port Orford-Langlois School District has one of the highest rates of child poverty in the country. Also, preschool options in this mainly rural area are limited, and incoming kindergarteners’ state-assessment scores for reading and math lie well below the median.

The Ready, Set, Learn! program is working to change these statistics. A collaboration between the District and South Coast Head Start, begun as a successful pilot in summer 2015, the program helps children develop their academic, social and physical skills, to best prepare them for kindergarten.

Now, with OCF funding, this year more children will be able to attend a longer, four-week summer school. They’ll learn how to pay attention and take turns, count objects and recognize letters of the alphabet; and they’ll practice spatial thinking and logical reasoning. Structured activities join creative free play, as these children sharpen their fine and gross motor skills and capacity to cooperate. Meanwhile, the program’s year-round gatherings for families build the social and support network for navigating the school system and helping their children flourish in it.

Chris Nichols, District Superintendent, says, “Ready, Set, Learn! connects our children, families, community and school together to create the culture children need to grow into successful adults.”
OASIS SHELTER HOME

In 1989, four years before Oasis Shelter Home received a house from a private donor, women and children tormented by domestic violence and sexual assault could find temporary refuge in the homes of a group of women in Gold Beach and Brookings.

Since 1995, Oasis here in Curry County has been the only emergency shelter of its kind in the 150 miles between Coos Bay, Oregon and Crescent City, California. Oasis’s 15 beds give women and children a safe place to sleep, and toys and games fill the playroom. Peer support groups, children’s programs, life-skills classes and other services help heal and restore the lives of its residents and outreach clients, leading them toward a fresh start. Meanwhile, crisis calls from all over the country come in on the shelter’s toll-free “hot line,” which is listed on the National Directory of Domestic Violence Shelters.

Oasis’s remote location makes it difficult for the shelter to raise funds. But OCF goes out of its way to reach those in need, no matter where they are in the state. The shelter’s main-floor bathroom, one of two in the house, “hadn’t been updated in over 20 years,” says Lea Seavey, Oasis’s Executive Director. So in May 2015, the Foundation gave a Community Grant to the shelter to remodel it. “Now the bathroom is up to ADA [Americans with Disabilities Act] standards, and it’s safe and comfortable for our clients.”

The upgrade helps them even more to make the necessary improvements for their own lives.
A FATHER’S GIFT

THE RILEY FAMILY FUND

Sandy Riley’s ancestors were philanthropists. So when he formed the Riley Family Fund, in 2002, his family joined him in his generosity and didn’t let his death in 2012 stop them from continuing to give.

“My father always talked with my brother, Clay, and I about how to balance our values with the causes we wanted to support,” says Renée Riley-Adams, of Ashland. She’s done the same with her daughters, Grace, 22 and Ella, 24.

“We give to causes that foster connection within our family, and tie us to the community. My father would be in favor of that. Giving allows us to stand in the world with more confidence and compassion.”

This year, the Riley Family Fund contributed to The Rotary Club’s international projects, Addictions Recovery Center in Medford and Jackson County SART (Sexual Assault Response Team). The family’s donation to the Ashland Rowing Club means that 15 high school students will get a chance to row. Since Clay and Ella surf, they also gave to the Ocean Conservancy.

“OCF makes it easy to give,” Riley-Adams says. “They offer suggestions of where to donate, if we don’t already have a plan. They know how to knit the state together, rural to urban—and I think Oregon really needs that.”

AN HOMAGE TO HOMESTEADERS
FORT ROCK MUSEUM

Operating and maintaining a museum sixty miles from the nearest city would be a daunting task for anyone. But the very tenacity that defines the residents of Oregon’s stark, arid northern Lake County makes them more than qualified to host the Fort Rock Valley Historical Homestead Museum in the tiny unincorporated community of Fort Rock.

From 1905 until about 1915, homesteaders moved to the Fort Rock Valley to claim Federal lands via the Homestead Acts. But the extreme weather of the high desert country around Fort Rock forced most homesteaders to abandon their claims within a few years. Today, the only two homesteader-era towns remaining are the small communities of Fort Rock and Silver Lake.

The Fort Rock Valley Historical Homestead Museum opened in 1988 with two buildings. Since then, the museum has acquired additional land from the Bureau of Land Management and more buildings from abandoned homestead sites around the valley.

Funding from recent OCF grants supported a part-time host for the Museum, to expand hours. Historical Society secretary/treasurer Bob Tuttle said, “More visitors have had the opportunity to visit and learn about the history of the homestead era in the valley, and in some cases, find their family history and roots.” Museum hours expanded by over 60 percent, resulting in a 24 percent increase in visitors. Tuttle added, “We have been able to provide employment to local citizens, in an area where jobs are hard to find, remarkable for a small volunteer organization in isolated North Lake County.”

A MUSEUM CAN SHINE A LIGHT ON THE PERSONALITY OF A COMMUNITY. THAT’S WHY IN 2015 OCF AND OUR DONORS AWARDED $1.8 M TO MUSEUMS AROUND THE STATE.
HITTING THE BIG ISSUES

THE REED AND CAROLEE WALKER FUND

SINCE 2004, THE REED AND CAROLEE WALKER FUND HAS DISTRIBUTED $21.6 M IN GRANTS TO JACKSON COUNTY.

Jacksonville attorney Alissa Weaver sees it firsthand in the courtroom: More and more, parents who are struggling to overcome addictions get to live with their kids after all.

That’s because of programs like OnTrack, with its outpatient and residential recovery services. It’s just one organization supported by the Reed and Carolee Walker Fund, since the Ashland couple’s 2003 bequest. Dedicated to the needy in Jackson County, especially children, the Fund awards about $2 million per year—to programs related to substance-abuse treatment for parents and pregnant women, children’s dental health and mental health, basic needs, and cultural and other enrichment activities for youth.

“There’s so much money, we’re able to help in a lot of different ways. We can really hit some big issues for low-income folks in our county,” says Alyssa Chair of the Fund’s Advisory Committee.

Before the Walker Fund, many children couldn’t get dental sealants because of unhealthy teeth. La Clinica, in Medford, helped change that. “Since more children have received free dental care and toothbrushes, good dental habits have become a family routine,” says Sue Naumes, of Medford, a member of the Advisory Committee and OCF’s board. “The Fund is also making more people aware of the nonprofits that serve children and families, and the problems those in poverty face, bettering our chances of solving them.”

As Alyssa puts it, “The Fund is making a lasting impact, and because of this, the Walkers are still very much alive.”

CHAD BARCZAK

Chad Barczak set up his first business when he was thirteen years old: a snowboard shop based in his locker. “I really wanted to get into snowboarding but my family couldn’t afford it, so I started a company and ended up paying for my first snowboard out of profits from my first catalog sale.”

Raised by a hard-working single mom, Chad has been entrepreneurial his whole life, but business school was at first an elusive dream to him. “I knew I wanted to go to grad school, but there were no scholarships available.” Instead, he used his undergraduate financial aid to seed a snowboarding business that became a multimillion dollar enterprise, earning him enough money to complete his BA and MBA degrees. Now, as the co-founder of a real estate technology firm that employs over fifty Eugene residents, Chad wants to pay it forward.

“Entrepreneurs always get left aside in business school: they’re bootstrappers, working not with other people’s money but with their own blood, sweat, tears, and credit cards,” Chad explains. “I wanted to support them by being both a mentor and a scholarship provider.” He started a fund at OCF to do precisely that. “One of the reasons I like OCF so much is because it’s local,” Chad says, “and I appreciate their guidance. Before I sat down with the OCF crew, I really had no charitable plan. Now, I don’t even have to think about the fund’s management but I can still advise its grant making.” His scholarship project is still in its early years, but, Chad says, “you have to start somewhere: with one client, with one kid.”
OREGON NATURAL RESOURCES EDUCATION FUND

From the coastal hemlocks to the high-desert ponderosa pines, Oregon’s forests make up nearly half the state’s 63 million acres. Pete Sikora believes we should be kind to them.

“It’s important to have the most qualified workforce to help manage the myriad of natural resources that come from within those forests,” says Sikora, Chief Operating Officer with Giustina Resources, a family-owned forest-management company in Springfield. The Oregon Natural Resources Education Fund (ONOEF) will make sure of that.

In 2001, Sikora, several other professionals and an Oregon Department of Education representative approached OCF to help create and support high school forest-related natural resources education. Before that, no dedicated funding source existed.

Now at 18 schools benefiting from ONRF, interested freshmen begin with an introduction to the various careers. During their four years, students learn about silviculture, harvesting, wood products, fisheries, wildlife, water, recreation, other areas of management, and leadership development. They plant trees and test stream-water quality, remove invasive-plant species and install bird boxes. And at Philomath High School, its portable sawmill and on-site forest give a hands-on experience of the forest-to-wood-products journey.

“What’s most exciting for me is that with fairly modest ONRF grants, OCF has really been the catalyst for a great interest in and expansion of forest-related natural resource education throughout the state.”

Preparing Oregon’s young people to take care of our forests better assures that our forests will keep doing what they do best.
IT’S ONLY NATURAL
No one could ever prepare for a gunman barging into a classroom. So after that horrific October 2015 day at Umpqua Community College in Roseburg, the community was determined to give and receive the support everyone needed.

"UCC was handling the college aspect, but there was no vehicle for off-campus recovery," says Anne Kubisch, president of The Ford Family Foundation there. Within hours of the fatal shooting, she opened the conference rooms to people wanting to help. Then she searched out a facilitator. OCF stepped in to fund Meredith Bliss, and the Community Healing and Response Team (CHART) was launched.

Meredith says, “We had three goals—to support the victims, their families and others affected by the tragedy; support each other within CHART; and ensure the long-term cohesion, resilience and vitality of Douglas County.”

Together, leaders within all sectors of the community defined the needs and clarified their roles. UCC Strong was formed to handle donations and regranting to victims; and the temporary Umpqua Wellness Center was set up for walk-in counseling.

Communities around the country that had suffered similar shootings pitched in. “Consistently, people told us this was going to be a long process of healing and recovery,” says Anne. CHART’s newly formed leadership council, those with decision-making authority in their respective organizations, is focusing on long-lasting, sustainable support.

Meredith says, “We can turn a tragedy into an opportunity to take the very best of who we are in this community and move forward to a place that’s even stronger.”
These numbers reflect the total amounts distributed in 2015 in grants and scholarships, organized by the Foundation’s and our donors’ priorities.

OCF AND YOU

Oregon individuals, families and businesses trust The Oregon Community Foundation to make their charitable giving as effective and meaningful as possible. Here are a few of the ways we can help you as well.

TAX ADVANTAGES
We help you achieve maximum tax advantages and work with your financial advisors and attorneys to incorporate giving into your plans.

INVESTMENT MANAGEMENT
Your charitable funds are invested and professionally managed in a large and well-diversified portfolio.

GRANTMAKING ASSISTANCE
Our staff can help you maximize the impact of your grant dollars, no matter what your passion.

PROFESSIONAL GIFT PLANNING
From the simple to the complex, our charitable gift planners can help turn your assets into impact.

FAMILY PHILANTHROPY INSIGHTS
We offer planning and facilitation to engage your new generation of philanthropists.

TYPES OF FUNDS

We can help you choose what type of fund is right for you.

DONOR ADVISED FUNDS
allow you to be an active participant, recommending grants from your fund.

DESIGNATED FUNDS
allow you to name one or more specific organizations to receive annual support.

COMMUNITY FUNDS
let you choose a particular area of need and OCF selects specific organizations to fund.

DISCRETIONARY FUNDS
entrust the Foundation’s board to make grants to meet the greatest current needs.

SCHOLARSHIP FUNDS
allow you to establish the scholarship criteria while the Foundation provides outreach and selects students.
In 2015, OCF was honored to receive gifts of all sizes from people representing every area of the state. Some donors directed their gift to specific causes. Others entrusted the allocation of their funds to us. All of these donors share a sense of community that magnifies the significance of their donation well beyond its dollar value. These funds are listed by the region in which the gift originated although many of the funds support causes in other areas of the state.

Create your own legacy through an endowed fund at OCF. These funds will make grants in your name, forever, to help the causes you care about.

Join these Oregonians.

OCF invests its endowed funds to provide a stable resource for Oregon. Effective investment management of these funds allows the Foundation to respond to today’s needs while preserving and enhancing the real value of the funds for future needs.

Asset Allocation

A diversified portfolio is fundamental to OCF’s investment strategy. A well-diversified investment portfolio helps maximize investment returns and reduce volatility. Our Investment Committee regularly reviews the asset allocation strategy. The allocation among asset classes at Dec. 31, 2015, is shown at right.

Investment Managers

To further diversify our portfolio, the OCF Investment Committee selects investment managers with expertise in managing specific asset classes. For a complete list of investment managers, please visit our website at www.oregoncf.org.

OCF Investment Committee

OCF’s Investment Committee oversees the investment program, makes recommendations to the board of directors regarding investment policy and strategy, and hires and monitors investment managers. The Investment Committee is made up of community volunteers and OCF board members with expertise in investments and business.

Endowment Partner funds are OCF funds established by charitable organizations in Oregon to serve as their endowments. The Foundation maintains variance power and legal ownership of the funds and reports them as assets. In accordance with Accounting Standards Codification 958-605-25-33, a liability has been established for the fair value of the funds, which is generally equivalent to the present value of future payments expected to be made to the charitable organization.
